About our governance

Street Roots prides itself on a three-prong management structure comprising the vendors, staff, and the board of directors. People who have experienced homelessness and poverty have representation at all levels.

Street Roots is also a member of the North American Street Newspaper Association, or NASNA, which helps organize more than 30 street newspapers across Canada and the United States. Street Roots receives no funding through NASNA.

In 2006, NASNA became a member of the International Network of Street Newspapers, which fosters journalism, advocacy and empowerment around the globe.

"It helped us so much. It really helped my husband Jason because he had tried so hard to get a job before and this was the only place that gave him a chance. From selling the paper we were actually able to save up enough money to get an apartment. It gave us a chance to make an honest living."

— Annie Mitchell
Vendor, volunteer

"Street Roots gives me the opportunity to participate in my community and to contribute through artwork and writing."

— Lawrence Marshall
Vendor

"It helps provide me with an income to help me make ends meet. I'm on disability from the government because I'm disabled, but it doesn't provide enough. Street Roots helps keep me housed and provides me with clothing."

— Millard Gullede,
Vendor, board member

"Street Roots has been my livelihood for nearly five years now and I have been involved with the paper both as a staff person and vendor. It is one of the most rewarding jobs I have ever had in my life. It's the way we work together and will continue working together — as a family."

— Bob Healy
Vendor and Vendor advisor
